Chandigarh: Washington-based environmental organisation EcoSikh and its India chapter EcoSikh Charitable Society on Monday claimed to have planted over 400 'Guru Nanak Sacred Forests' in Punjab and other parts of India in three years.

The organisation released a report, giving details of all the locations and kinds of trees planted in these forests, besides releasing 'A-Z tutorials' on forest making in Punjabi. EcoSikh founder and global president Rajwant Singh said, "The Sacred Forest project was launched to commemorate 550th birth anniversary of Guru Nanak and to mitigate the effects of climate change."

He said their forests were greening the barren land.
